

Chapter-1

1. What is communication? Explain its importance in our daily life.

Answer:

Communication is the process of exchanging information, ideas, thoughts, feelings, and messages between two or more people. It can take place through speaking, writing, gestures, facial expressions, or other methods.

Communication is important in our daily life because:

1. It helps us express our thoughts and feelings.
2. It helps us understand other people.
3. It helps in building good relationships.
4. It helps us share information and knowledge.
5. Effective communication helps us solve problems and avoid misunderstandings.

Therefore, good communication is necessary for personal, educational, and professional success.

2. What are the different methods of communication?

Answer:

Communication can be carried out in different ways. The main methods of communication are:

1. Verbal Communication: It involves the use of words, either spoken or written. For example, talking to a teacher or writing a letter.
2. Non-verbal Communication: It involves communicating without words through facial expressions, gestures, posture, eye contact, and body language.
3. Visual Communication: It uses pictures, symbols, signs, charts, graphs, and diagrams to convey information.
4. Written Communication: It involves sharing information through written words, such as emails, notices, messages, and reports.
5. Oral Communication: It involves speaking directly to another person or group, such as a classroom discussion or speech.

Different methods can be used depending on the situation and the message being communicated.

3. Differentiate between verbal and non-verbal communication with examples.

Answer:

Verbal Communication

It uses words to convey a message.

It can be spoken or written.

Non-verbal Communication

It communicates without using words.

It includes gestures, expressions, posture, and eye contact.

Chapter-1

Verbal Communication

It is useful for explaining detailed information.

The message is mainly communicated through language.

Example: Giving a speech or writing an email.

Non-verbal Communication

It is useful for expressing emotions and attitudes.

The message is mainly communicated through body signals.

Example: Smiling, nodding, or waving.

Both verbal and non-verbal communication are important for effective communication.

4. What is active listening? Mention any two qualities of a good listener.

Answer:

Active listening means listening carefully and attentively to a speaker in order to understand the complete message. An active listener does not simply hear the words but also tries to understand the speaker's feelings and meaning.

The qualities of a good listener include:

1. Paying attention: A good listener gives full attention to the speaker and avoids unnecessary distractions.
2. Not interrupting: A good listener allows the speaker to complete their thoughts before responding.
3. Maintaining eye contact: Appropriate eye contact shows that the listener is interested.
4. Asking questions: A good listener asks relevant questions when something is not clear.
5. Giving feedback: Nodding or responding appropriately shows that the message has been understood.

Active listening helps reduce misunderstandings and improves relationships.

5. What are communication barriers? Give any two examples.

Answer:

Communication barriers are obstacles or problems that prevent a message from being communicated or understood correctly. These barriers can cause confusion, misunderstanding, or incorrect information.

Some common communication barriers are:

1. Language barrier: When people speak different languages or use difficult words that the other person cannot understand.
2. Physical barrier: Noise, distance, poor internet connection, or other physical conditions can affect communication.
3. Emotional barrier: Anger, fear, stress, or nervousness can make it difficult to communicate properly.

4. Cultural barrier: Different cultures may have different meanings for gestures, words, or behaviours.
5. Lack of attention: If the receiver is distracted or not listening carefully, the message may not be understood.

Therefore, identifying and removing communication barriers is important for effective communication.

6. Why is body language important while communicating with others?

Answer:

Body language is a form of non-verbal communication that includes facial expressions, gestures, posture, eye contact, and movements of the body. It plays an important role in communicating our feelings and attitudes.

Body language is important because:

1. It helps express emotions such as happiness, sadness, anger, or nervousness.
2. It supports and strengthens verbal communication.
3. It helps show confidence and interest while speaking.
4. It can make communication clearer and more effective.
5. Positive body language helps create a good impression on others.

For example, maintaining appropriate eye contact and sitting with a confident posture can show that a person is attentive and interested in the conversation.
